"Have you or any member of your family served in the military?" Asking this one question can make a big difference for a service member, veteran or family member. Anyone who has or has had an affiliation with the military does not fit a single mold. They may have served in a war from many years ago, or they may be in a present engagement today. They may be Active duty, Guard or Reserve members, or they may be a spouse, parent, child or caregiver. By asking a military-affiliated question, it establishes a common language, opens doors to a better understanding of needs, and signals to provide military-veteran specific services and resources.
